

SPECIALIZATION: Economics of service and production processes

FIELD: ECONOMICS

This aim of this specialization is to present the latest advances in business approach to process management, to initiate new trends in the development of technology and technology, to manage change in the enterprise and to raise awareness of the importance of effective and efficient business process management, directly leading to increased customer satisfaction.

A graduate of this area of specialization can expect to find a job as:

- An initiator, animator and manager of employee teams taking business improvement actions
- Designer of production systems and production processes
- Analyst in the field of labour productivity, production preparation (production design), production support (maintenance), production management
- Expert in cost optimization, production logistics, quality management, work safety and environmental protection,
- Consultant in the field of automation and robotization of production systems
- Consultant on design and restructuring of information systems in enterprises
- Expert in ergonomics at work